Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities

What is the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities?

The Framework Convention came into force on 1 February 1998 and is one of the most comprehensive treaties designed to protect the rights of persons belonging to a national minority.

Parties to this Convention undertake to promote the full and effective equality of persons belonging to minorities in all areas of economic, social, political and cultural life together with the conditions that will allow them to express, preserve and develop their culture and identity.

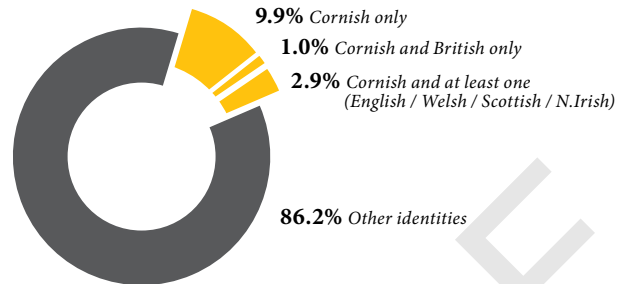

The UK Government recognised the Cornish as a national minority in April 2014. The Council of Europe Advisory Committee on the Framework Convention published its Fourth Opinion on the United Kingdom in March 2017, the first since the Cornish were recognised, which sets out recommendations for the Government and local authorities to work towards.

What is a National Minority?

There is no general definition agreed upon by the Council of Europe member states about what constitutes a National Minority. Each party to the Framework Convention is therefore able to assess which groups are to be covered by the Convention within their own area.

For the Advisory Committee, the Framework Convention is not an “all-or-nothing” instrument. This Advisory Committee has therefore adopted an article by article approach to the question of the groups covered by the Framework Convention, recognising that some articles in the convention have a larger scope to include a wide range of groups than do others.

14% of Cornwall's total population identify as being Cornish*

* 73,200 people stated in the 2011 Census that they identify as being Cornish

In the 2011 Census people were able to identify themselves as Cornish under the White: British category, by writing in the word 'Cornish'. It was also the first time that people could record their language as Cornish, again as a write-in option.

What is Cornwall Council's role?

Cornwall Council has a Cornish Minority Status Working Group, which includes members and officers from across the Council, together with key partners.

This group works on co-ordinating activity to support Cornish culture, language and heritage and strives to implement recommendations from the Council of Europe.

More detailed information is available on the Council's website.

Will exiting the EU impact this status?

In June 2016 the UK voted to leave the EU. This caused concern among some community groups about whether the Council of Europe's protection of national minorities would still be upheld after the UK leaves the EU and whether the Government will be committed to carrying on supporting the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities.

Cornwall Council contacted the Ministry of Housing, Communities and Local Government and they confirmed in February 2017 that:

“The Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities is a Council of Europe instrument, and has nothing to do with the European Union. The UK ratified the Framework Convention in 1998 and this will be unaffected by the UK leaving the EU.”

Who decides whether someone belongs to a National Minority?

Individuals are free to decide whether or not they wish to be treated as belonging to a national minority.

This does not mean that each person can arbitrarily choose to belong to any national minority. An individual's choice must be based on objective criteria connected with that person's identity, such as language, religion and culture.
